

What is news with Huw Edwards, BBC newsreader: key points

- Working in news is exciting, but challenging: we have to make our deadlines and ensure we get our stories right every time.
- Reports can be made in many different ways, but make sure you know how to put reports on your school website so we can link to them and your audience can read them.
- Making the news means a lot of work behind the scenes.
- Think about what actually makes something news – it needs to be something new, and it must mean something to your audience, so something they need to know or want to know.
- At the BBC, we cover a wide variety of stories, depending on the audience for a programme or service.
- Stories are everywhere you look so keep your eyes and ears open to find original journalism: be curious.
- Stories can be about your school, the area where you live, the UK or even international.
- Why not hold an editorial meeting – like we do at the BBC – to decide what stories to cover?
